San Diego Children's Discovery Museum Hosts Little Explorers Fall & Winter Camp

Escondido, CA.-- San Diego Children's Discovery Museum is thrilled to host its Little Explorers Fall Camp, November 21-23, and Little Explorers Winter Camp, December 26-29 and January 3-6, for children ages 4 to 8 years old.

This fall, the Museum is inviting budding naturalists for an educational adventure to learn about nocturnal animals and what nature does at night. Campers will explore adaptations and behaviors of nocturnal animals, how light affects plants, and how some animals survive in the dark.

During winter break, campers will explore weather and the four seasons followed by a full week of discovering new ways to make music. The Museum invites all budding scientists and musicians to complete daily science and art activities with new challenges and problem solving.

The Museum's Discovery Camps provide hands-on enriching educational opportunities for children during their school breaks. With access to all Museum exhibits and curated programming throughout the week, campers will leave the Museum each day with a greater understanding of STREAM (science, technology, reading, engineering, art, and math) concepts.

"At the Museum, we pride ourselves in creating authentic hands-on learning experiences that spark a love of learning. These camps are a terrific opportunity for children to spend their school holidays engaged in a way that fuels their curiosity and imagination." said Sarah Loftus, Education Manager of Camps and School Programs at San Diego Children's Discovery Museum.

Pre-registration is required.
